(*) Instead of the full list of indicators in the 2020 CHRB Methodology, this year's assessment uses the CHRB Core UNGP Indicators. These are 13 non-industry specific indicators that focus on three key areas of the UNGPs: high level commitments, human rights due diligence and access to remedy.

The 13 indicators selected from the full CHRB Methodology are scored on a simple unweighted basis, with a maximum of 2 points for each indicator for a maximum total of 26 points.

In addition, allegations of severe human rights impacts (Measurement Theme E) were also assessed but do not impact overall final scores

Please note that the "Not met" labels in the Explanation boxes below do not necessarily mean that the company does not meet the requirements as they are described in the bullet point short text. Rather, it means that the analysts could not find information in public sources that met the requirements as described in full in the CHRB 2020 Methodology document. For example, a "Not met" under "General HRs Commitment", which is the first bullet point for indicator A.1.1, does not necessarily mean that the company does not have a general commitment to human rights. Rather, it means that the CHRB could not identify a public statement of policy in which the company commits to respecting human rights.

E(1).0	Serious allegation No 1		<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Headline: Supply chains of Kraft Heinz and others criticized for forced labor and discrimination linked to China's political assimilation ethnic Uighurs and Muslims • Area: Forced labour • Story: Several companies worldwide have allegedly been involved with China's campaign to forcibly assimilate its Muslim population. Residents of the Xinjiang region are reportedly forced into training programs for area factories, which allegedly includes a subsidiary of Youngor. The Wall Street Journal reports that 'Along with vocational skills, the curriculum covers Mandarin Chinese, the importance of the Communist Party and national unity, Chinese law and how to counter extremism—such as not dressing too conservatively or praying too frequently. The programs can include military like drills. For workers and factory bosses, resistance to such programs could result in detention as suspected extremist sympathizers.' These programs are allegedly aimed at Uighurs and other Muslim minorities. Specific to Youngor, it reports that 'workers were told not to pray in public or keep books with ethnic or religious content, according to an online post by Youngor. The post said employees were told not to browse or spread online content harmful to ethnic unity, and that the company would tighten its internet oversight.' Youngor Group Co. also held such a periodic deradicalization programs session for 240 workers. Local officials claim that that residents are not being forced into these training programs. However, a Uighur outside the city remembers officials sweeping through villages to 'organize' locals to work at the textile factories, and if the worker quit, the officials would return. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Sources: [Wall Street Journal - 16/05/2019: wsj.com][Boingboing - 16/05/2019: boingboing.net]

As WBA, we want to emphasise that the results will always be a proxy for good human rights management, and not an absolute measure of performance. This is because there are no fundamental units of measurement for human rights. Human rights assessments are therefore necessarily more subjective than objective. The Benchmark also captures only a snap shot in time. We therefore want to encourage companies, investors, civil society and governments to look at the broad performance bands that companies are ranked within rather than their precise score because, as with all measurements, there is a reasonably wide margin of error possible in interpretation. We also want to encourage a greater analytical focus on how scores improve over time rather than upon how a company compares to other companies in the same industry today. The spirit of the exercise is to promote continual improvement via an open assessment process and a common understanding of the importance of the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.
